A group of regulations known as company law regulate how businesses operate and behave. Since a corporation is viewed by the law as an artificial person created by a group of people for the purpose of conducting business, company law is established as a collection of regulations and laws pertaining to firms. It includes policies and guidelines for the company's formation, financing, operation, and demise. Company law outlines the legal responsibilities of the business to ensure its long-term viability. It outlines how the company's stakeholders will communicate with the business and with one another. Another name for company law is corporate law or business law.

The firms Act of 2013 governs Indian firms, which are controlled by the Ministry of Corporate Affairs (MCA). All of the detailed laws pertaining to companies are included in the Companies Act. Private and public firms are the two primary categories of businesses.

The Companies Act of 2013 is made up of 29 chapters that are further subdivided into 470 parts that describe the laws pertaining to the conduct of different companies. Depending on the criminal or civil offense they have committed, noncompliance with the Companies Act by various parties or individuals connected to the firm may result in penalties, fines, imprisonment, or other severe punishments. The National Company Law Tribunal (NCLT) hears cases pertaining to businesses.
